

At the Movies 'Monte Walsh' outstanding

By JOHN HARTL
"Nobody gets to be a cowboy forever," says saddle-wearer Jack Palance to Lee Marvin midway through "Monte Walsh," at the Music Box Theater.

The line is also the theme of this beautiful Western, which combines nostalgia and realism more happily than any film of its kind since the underrated "Will Penny."

THE PICTURE is the directorial debut of William Fraker, who was cinematographer on "Rosemary's Baby" and "Paint Your Wagon." As might be expected, the film is visually close to perfection.

But it is more than that. Fraker's casting and direction of actors and his unhurried approach to the story reveal an artist of unassuming sensitivity.

Probably someone will write a master's thesis about the recent increase in Westerns about the closing of the frontier — and about what makes such films popular at this particular time. There are more and more films about aging gunslingers and cowhands, the end of their way of life and the difficulty of adjusting to a more restricted life style.

"Monte Walsh" is about a couple of older cowboys (Marvin and Palance) who find jobs becoming scarcer as the railroads and big investors close in.

In a neatly stated opening, their ranch foreman (Jim Davis) tells them that no one talks about "money" anymore; the word is "capital." Local property owners have sold out their interest to distant firms that give orders that no one likes.

There is still a prostitute with a heart of gold (Jeanne Moreau) in this dying West, but Marvin, who has slept with her for years, now talks of marrying her and getting a regular job. Palance traps himself with a widow who owns a hardware store, while other cowhands become cattle rustlers and killers. No one is left unchanged.

THE MOVIE has some HOLLYWOOD — "WUSA." Paramount film to be released soon, is the seventh film that Joanne Woodward and Paul Newman have appeared in together. They previously co-starred in "The Long, Hot Summer," "Rally Round the Flag, Boys," "From the Terrace," "Paris Blues," "A New Kind of Love" and "Winning." Newman also directed "Rachel, Rachel," in which Miss Woodward starred.

Review board on oil drilling asked of Evans

The Highline Community Forum has asked Gov. Dan Evans to appoint a special review board on proposed oil drilling beneath Puget Sound.

The board should look into the decision-making process being used to determine if permits to drill will be granted, the group said. "We are convinced that the matter of oil exploration under or near the shoreline of Puget Sound by means of slant drilling is not, at present, receiving impartial, objective consideration from the Department of Natural Resources," the forum coordinating board wrote to the governor.

"Our conviction is based upon our conversations with the state oil and gas supervisor (Marshall Hunting) and from review of recorded testimony provided by him at the Highline Public Forum last week," the group said.

Holdup victim, 80, spots 2 suspects

Two men, 34 and 41, were arrested for investigation after a robbery victim pointed them out to police at Second Avenue South and South Washington Street early yesterday.

Oliver G. Larsen, 80, a resident of the Gospel Mission, 318 Second Ave. S., told police he was attacked and knocked to the ground.

Police came on the scene as the suspects were walking away from Larsen. Police said $34 taken from Larsen was found in one man's pocket.

Plans moving ahead on expansion of Jefferson Park Recreation Center

Bids are expected to be asked in about two weeks for the Jefferson Park Recreation Center expansion, Mel Streeter, architect, told the Park Board yesterday.

Streeter said plans include classrooms for painting, music, ceramics, and pottery, game and conference rooms and space for weight lifting, lockers and showers in the basement.

The Spruce mini-park is being designed for senior citizens and preschool children, Cal Jordan, landscape architect, told the board.

The park, between East Spruce and East Fir Streets on 21st Avenue, will have swings, slides, climbing bars and an observation area. The park site was selected through the Model City program.

The park, about three fourths of an acre, is being studied as part of a planned trail between the former Washington Junior High School and Garfield High School by Model City officials and the city Community Development Department.

LIGHTS — The board said lights and poles installed last Friday near Alki Playground are temporary.

Fifteen residents said in a petition that the lights blind at night and ruin the view, and questioned if they reduce vandalism.

ATLANTIC CITY The Department has applied to the Interagency Committee for Outdoor Recreation for matching funds to purchase 8 1/2 acres southward from the Atlantic City Park at Seward Park Avenue South and South Henderson Street.

David Towne, administrative assistant to Park Supt. Hans Thompson, said over-the-water apartments threaten the plans. The site, scheduled in the 1971 capital-improvements program, was recommended as a park last year by the Rainier Beach Community Club.

TIDELANDS — Letters will be sent to owners of some tidelands at Magnolia asking that purchase negotiations begin.

The area, called Tideland II, is south of Fort Lawton. The department hopes to include the tidelands in the development of a park at Fort Lawton.

NAME — Paul A. Maffeo, representative of the Italian community, asked the board that a waterfront park be named for Christopher Columbus. The request was referred to the name committee.

TRAILS Calhoun Dickinson, Janet Zema and Herb Tsuchiya, board members, have been named to a sub-committee to investigate potential areas for bikeways and trails.

NAMING — Mrs. Cheatham Van Ness has been named chairman of the board's permanent naming committee. Other members include Dickinson and Frank Ray and David Towne of the department staff.
